DEAD IN HIS OFFICE.
Suicide of a Prominent Lawyer and Politician.

Tired of a Life of Sin He Puts a Bullet Through His Heart... Utica, New York.
Started.

Utica, N. Y., Nov. 5.—Arthur B. Johnson, a lawyer and well-known politician, was found dead in his office with a pistol ball in his breast. His great uncle of Johnson L. Lynch, who was shot by Bowell in Batavia, occupied the same office. The suicide of Johnson has started Utica more than any tragedy within its borders in many years. Following so closely on the shooting of his nephew it sets the community abuzz. Lynch's funeral was held from the home of his mother, Johnson's sister. The latter's absence therefrom attracted attention, as he was known to be much attached to his nephew. It was learned that he was drinking most of the day and until midnight at the house of the young woman whom he called his private secretary, Miss Lena Bender. His private relations with her have been good for gossip and an open scandal for years. He had been known, when under the influence of liquor to pass days and weeks together at his house, which is just across the Mohawk river, in Deaford, not going to his home in the intervals. Miss Bender went to his private office in the morning at 10 and saw him at his desk; his body gave the first intimation of his death, which may have occurred hours earlier, as the corpse was cold. Her cries that "Her darling was dead" and "Why did I ever doubt him?" are held to indicate that she and Johnson had quarreled. Her brother John says he accompanied Johnson from their house at midnight, he not being in a condition to go alone. He took him to the office, where he shut himself in. The private office is sixteen feet square, with a bedroom seven feet square in one corner. On the walls of the main room the nude in art is illustrated by two full length figures. Valuable papers and checks lay upon the desk. A detainer with cut-glass ware and other evidences of free living were noticeable. A single shelf above the writing-desk was filled with books, the "Decameron," the "Hypatameron," the holy bible, and the "Confessions of Rousseau," standing in the order named. A woman's needlework was on the buffet. The body lay prone on its back, fully dressed; the bullet wound being straight through the heart, from the left breast. Appearances indicated that not a muscle had moved after the shot had been fired. A work on anatomy lying open on the desk at a page showing the position of the heart indicates that Johnson had studied how to make his work sure.

A press correspondent interviewed Miss Bender, whose statement is that she was late in going to the office in the morning, and it was not until about 9:35 that she reached the room. Upon opening the door the first thing that met her gaze was the form of Mr. Johnson on the bed. She saw a revolver on the floor by the side of the bed, and Mr. Johnson's ghastly white face and motionless body told her the story. She uttered a cry and gentlemen in in other offices on the floor came to her assistance. Wednesday Mr. Johnson was much depressed by the killing of his nephew, and later he said to Miss Bender: "Do you want another John Lynch case here?"

She replied: "What do you mean? Are you threatening to kill yourself?"

He said: "No; circumstances are such that they will not allow of such a case here."

Miss Bender says she then hid his revolver.

In conversation afterward Mr. Johnson said:

"I have handled firearms for years, and would know how to kill myself. The easiest way is to stick a penknife into the neck and pierce the artery and let the blood run into the throat."

Miss Bender stated that in looking over the papers in the office she found one written by Mr. Johnson which read: "I myself have done this thing. Please ask no questions about it." She said to him: "You are going to do something to wound somebody." He replied:

"Well," very slowly, and added, after some hesitation, "I guess not." The post mortem conducted by Dr. Booth disclosed that the bullet passed directly through the heart and lodged in the spinal column.

Mr. Johnson was a son of the late A. B. Johnson, banker, and 59 years of age. He was a graduate of Hobart college. His brothers were the late Alexander S. Johnson, circuit judge of the United States; Gen. Charles A. Johnson, of New York; and W. C. Johnson, of Newburyport, Mass. A sister is the wife of C. R. Williams, United States consul at Calais. Another is Mrs. J. L. Lynch, of this city. His widow is a daughter of Ward Hunt, retired Justice of the United States supreme court, who with four children, the youngest under 20 years, survives him. He was a Republican of the Stalwart faction and a close friend of Roscoe Conkling. He was a delegate in the Cincinnati convention which nominated Mr. Hayes, and had been for years member of the New York Republican state committee. He had operated extensively in stocks, and is said to have lost considerable losses lately. He was a member of the Fort Schuyler club. His family and social connections were of the first in Utica. His residence in Genesee street was large and elegantly appointed, and only his peculiarities have prevented its being one of the happiest homes in Utica. He was conscious of his failings, and after a periodical spree has been heard to wish himself dead.

Miss Bender says that Johnson had been despondent for ten days and frequently discussed with her different methods of suicide. Over a year ago he showed her prussic acid, which he intimated he might use. She got it away from him by biting his hand, and threw it into the fire. She says her exclamation on discovering him dead was not "Why did I ever doubt him?" but "Why did I let him leave us?"—meaning that he was not kept at her house over night. She says his business affairs were always kept carefully posted up, and as she kept all of his accounts she knew he was not in financial distress. His interest in the Haskell multi-church gun was large, and he was perfectly satisfied that in its future were large fortunes.

—Found Guilty.

Cheena Hale and C. S. De Jean, of the town of Rutland, were before the municipal court in this city, on Friday, and were found guilty of netting ducks in certain waters in their town. They were defended very ably, by Hon. Burr W. Jones. Finding that his case was lost, he appealed to the court to impose as light a fine as possible. He said sporting clubs and certain newspapers had made great ado in the matter. They had endeavored to make it show that the offense was of terrible consequence.

District Attorney La Follette, for the state, called attention to the fact that the offenders had defied the law, had resisted arrest, when found in an unlawful act. In their netting business they had provided themselves with great outfits; their paraphernalia was complete. They had taken great pains in establishing a business that was unlawful, according to the statutes of the state.

The court could not consider the offense light or trivial; it might have been considered such, had the parties caught small numbers for their own use. But the proof had been established that they had gone about the work on a large scale. They appeared to have defied the law. The highest fine (one hundred dollars) would not be imposed, because it was the first offense. But a second offense of the kind would meet the full penalty. The court then imposed a fine of seventy-five dollars and costs on each party.

The case has been appealed to the Dane county circuit court.—Madison Democrat.

Tobacco Review.

From the Wisconsin Tobacco Reporter.

There has been a decided lull in the tobacco market at this point since our last report. But one new dealer has joined the force already in the field during the week, while a good number of those most active have pulled off the road for the time being. There are indications present that the "boom" of the past few weeks has commenced to decline, though prices are probably as stiff now as at any time this season. The fact is the desirable crop has very generally been picked up, and the buyer who comes at this late date to secure a packing of the better quality of the '88 crop will have a vast deal of riding to do. There is a great amount of the frosted tobacco that remains unsold, for the demand thus far has been for the perfect leaf. Quotations are probably as stiff now as at any time this season.
